

ABSTRACT

Decorative containers, such as tins, have a recognizable external appearance and are at least partially filled with contents that have flavors or fragrances, or scents, that correspond to the external appearances of the containers. The containers may appear as bakery goods, fruits, or other items. Various contents that may be stored or kept in such containers include, but are not limited to, candles, air fresheners, candies, creams, balms, waxes, gels, water-absorbent particles or beads, bath salt, and liquids. Methods of manufacturing and using the containers are also described.
